A SCOTCH JOURNALIST'S IMPRESSIONS OF AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS.

By David E. Thomson.

To condense my impressions of American journalism after a tour in your country of nearly three months, covering visits to most of the large cities in the Eastern half of the States, is no easy task, as there are few subjects which cause so many and so varied impressions, with the exception, perhaps, of your many and varied countrymen.

The difference between, for instance, the New York World and the Baltimore Sun is very striking, and I know of no two large morning papers on this side of the Atlantic which differ so much from each other in style and get-up as these two do. Both, I was told, were splendid properties; yet how dissimilar. The one so close set, so staid and dignified, so respectable, so neat, admitting no display and inserting no blocks; the other so full of resource, of go-aheadness and of novelty, nothing being too new for it and nothing too big.

My own daily, the Dundee Courier, being a half-penny, or, in your coinage, a one cent paper, I naturally paid considerable attention to papers of same price on your side, such as the Morning Journal, the Chicago News, and the Philadelphia Record, all three thoroughly alive papers. The office of the latter was one of the neatest I visited, and Mr. Singerly's private room, with its artistic treasures, was quite a little study in itself. The circulation of the Chicago News for a daily had long been a wonder to us on this side, although we have several weeklies which exceed it—some of our London weeklies publishing nearly one million copies weekly, while my own, the Dundee Weekly News, reaches close to the quarter million a week. These figures did surprise some of your circulation managers, as your weeklies, with a few exceptions, seem to lag behind. The reason for this, however, is not far to seek, as our weeklies to a certain extent take the place of your Sunday editions, on which day we have practically no issues excepting perhaps half a dozen papers in the largest cities, a notable example being the London New York Herald.

I have very pleasant recollections of interviews with newspaper men on your side, and may mention the following amongst others: Mr. Thomas Dyas, of the Toronto Mail, a gentleman full of fertile ideas; Mr. Lawson and Mr. Beaunisne, of the Chicago News; Mr. Scott and Mr. Portman, of the Chicago Herald; Mr. Knapp, of the St. Louis Republic; Mr. Driscoll, of the Pioneer Press; Mr. Baker, of the St. Paul Globe, and Mr. Thompson, of the St. Paul Dispatch; Mr. Feil, of the Omaha Bee; Mr. Bishop, of the Cincinnati Enquirer; Mr. Merrill and Mr. Talcott Williams, of the Philadelphia Press; Mr. Wilkins, of the Washington Post, and Mr. McElroy, of the National Tribune; Mr. Prescott, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer; Mr. Osborne, of the Scripps League papers; Mr. McGuffin, of the New York World, and Mr. Wood, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

New York, of course, is the great center, although the papers of Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago have each their characteristics and individualities. The success with which papers like the Youth's Companion and the Ladies' Home Journal are managed was exceedingly interesting, and the visits I paid to the establishments of these publications I look back to with pleasure. I must confess astonishment at the advertising prices the former gets and which would make newspaper proprietors on this side rich in no time. The comparative cheapness with which advertising space can be got on this side may account for the increasing flow of American advertisements to papers on this side.

The method, attention to detail and care with which Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis runs his paper did strike me, and I was very pleased indeed to make this gentleman's acquaintance.

Another Philadelphian I met was Mr. George W. Childs, whose name is almost a household word here. With his publishing office so near the historical center of those actions which through the War of Independence severed your country from ours, it was very pleasing indeed to find one who has done and is doing so much to cement the friendship of the two great English-speaking peoples.

On the whole your papers seemed to me to have larger circulations for the population than ours, and more of your small towns seemed to support flourishing dailies than ours. I know of no town in Scotland with less than 60,000 having a daily, while a place of that size on your side would support several. Even in our largest cities, with the exception of London, there are not many dailies. In Glasgow, for instance, with a population similar to Chicago, there are only two morning daily papers and three evening papers. In Chicago I believe there is twice that number. This is no doubt accounted for by your advertisers going in for more generous advertising.

One great feature in newspaper publishing here I saw little of on your side is the issue of contents bills. The only thing of the kind I remember seeing was the bulletin boards at the newspaper office doors. Nearly every paper here puts out these contents bills, stating principal items of news and principal articles, and for our Dundee Courier and Dundee Weekly News we give out one bill for each agent—the total number of which selling our papers exceeds 7,000.

Our papers are not sent by mail to the same extent as yours, as the postage here is a half-penny—equivalent to one cent of your money—on each paper.

I noticed that many of your newspapers are owned by companies or corporations. Here, as a rule, papers belong to single individuals, private firms, or families. My papers, for instance, belong entirely to my father, my brothers and myself.

There are other differences, but too many to mention. The condensing of long speeches is a very wise thing on the part of your papers. Here it is by no means uncommon to see four or five close-set columns of solid type, with not a head-line to relieve it.

In machine department things are pretty similar on both sides, although in the introduction of electric motors to drive newspaper presses some of your papers are ahead.

In the invention of typesetting and line-setting machinery, you seem to have most of the genius, having no less than four type-line composing machines.

I must not conclude this letter without reference to PRINTERS' INK, and I must say I was quite delighted on having a copy put into my hands by, I think, Mr. Taylor, of the Toronto Globe, a few days after my arrival on your side. I think it a very smart publication indeed, and look forward to its arrival here every week with pleasure.

ONE MERCHANT'S WAY.

By W. D. Showalter.

You, if you are a retail merchant and an advertiser, will allow me the point that one of your chief difficulties in business is to get your clerks thoroughly in touch with the spirit of your advertising, so that when a customer is attracted solely upon the art you have breathed into your announcement, the spell is not completely shattered by the manner or methods of the clerk. You know that it is happening in a thousand stores to-day—now, while you are reading—that a well-written advertisement has given a customer a sort of glowing ideal of a store; and said customer—a new one—is paying a visit to the establishment that can invite patronage with so much politeness and cordiality; and just now, while we are talking about it, the clerks or sales-people in these some thousands of stores are dashing a little cold water on the good impression the advertisement made.

It's merely a case of "the times are out of joint." These stores are out of joint; they are not well organized; they are not a great, big, composite merchant, as they should be—these clerks are not; but each is doing his own pulling, and in his own way—to the extent, at least, of making the business jerky. The sales-people are out of gear with the advertising man.

I happen to know personally a merchant who has almost gotten rid of this problem. He employs about fifty sales-people, and his line is "general store" goods. He writes his own advertisements, and writes them well. They are read, and bear fruit. But he got tired of twisting his brains around for arguments to induce Mrs. Homewoman to come to his store, and then seeing Mary Manning, at silk counter, spoil his success after the advertisement had done its work.

So my friend, the merchant, went to his Miss Mary Manning, at silk counter, and handed her his "copy" for a silk counter advertisement, one day, and asked her to study it for a while and then come to his desk and tell him what she thought of it; how it could be improved; what she would say if she were trying to get people to visit the store. The astonished clerk gave him no pointers that time, but she pried her eyes open so wide that they commenced to look at things in a somewhat new light.

My merchant began to take each clerk into his confidence in this manner; to ask them to think up points about their department for him to use; to try to see what there was about the things they sold to interest people when told in print. And he liked the results so well that he got to questioning his clerks on how to keep the interest the advertisement might incite awake and increasing when the customer arrived. In short ("in short" is not a good expression, but who of us can kill it?) he broiled his clerks in the same ideas that his announcements proceeded from; and there are now fewer jerks in the store management; and, not very strange to say, my merchant friend makes advertising pay. Could it do otherwise than pay under such conditions?

THE "ABSORPTION" THEORY.

By George R. Kennedy.

Mr. Gillam, of Wanamaker's, gives to the word "absorption" a new significance by his use of it. There is a great deal more to this one word than most of us discovered at first reading, or than the article in PRINTERS' INK of Jan. 28th told or suggested.

To those who hold that the knowledge acquired by the several department heads of a store is of no practical use when it is applied to the writing of an advertisement affecting any particular department, then this word "absorption" will be, of all words, the most distasteful.

To those who know that the head of a department must of necessity know a good deal more about the goods he handles, and to the study of which he gives the best part of his life, than any writer who must have a thought for the twenty, thirty, or fifty-four other departments under the same roof, this word "absorption" will come with encouragement and strength.

There is a danger in formulating any theory and launching it upon a choppy sea, without a word of caution as to the difference between sailing there and upon the still waters of an inland lake.

If a young writer should fasten his thought upon this one word, and determine that it shall hereafter control his life as a writer, he may possibly be on the threshold of the best success possible to him, or he may be on the edge of a precipice down which he may one day tumble with his house on top of him.

The theory of "absorption," simply stated, is that the writer shall at all times rely upon the heads of departments for his facts concerning goods and their value. If he is told that a certain fabric is all silk, or wool, or cotton, he is to say so in his written story to the public.

There is no possible harm, but absolute good, in pursuing to its utmost this theory at Wanamaker's, of Philadelphia, or at Barnard, Sumner & Co's, of Worcester, or at many other thoroughly upright establishments throughout the land; but there comes a place where the good in this theory stops and the direst hurt follows in its train.

The "absorption" theory is the highest possible point of vantage for a writer if the house with whom he is connected has for its controlling thought all that is honorable, upright and true; a house that insists upon absolute faith being kept between the store and its customers; a store where the line between goods with only a seeming of value and the genuine article is sharply drawn; a store where the entire truth is told and where all things good to buy alone can be found.

In a store like this nothing can be better than this theory of "absorption," whether the writer be young or whether he be old, whether he has just received his precious "sheepskin," or whether he has come up from the sharpest of business training.

The "absorption" theory is the whole-hearted management, cordial—most dangerous possible to follow if the house has but one ruling thought or one controlling purpose, and that to get the most for the least; to appear to give the most when it is known that the seeming is a lie; to struggle year in and year out to lesson values where it can be least detected, to the end that they may reap a larger gain by practical deception.

If there is in this bread land a house like this, then right there this "absorption" theory makes the writer a party to a fraud, and if he adopts it there will be danger to conscience and a possible utter demoralization of his character as a man. The excuse that "it is business" is as hollow and as false as the efforts of the house for whom he prostitutes his efforts.

The "absorption" theory has a dangerous side even in the highest houses. Suppose you announce a great January sale of linens, you say to the public that the prices named will last during the month of January. There results a great sale, and the rush the last few days is inspiring.

Suppose that on the last day of the month the head of the department, fortified by the approval of the firm, comes to you with enthusiasm and tells you he "has concluded to run the sale one week longer." What are you to do? Are you to "absorb" that idea and publish to the community that all you had previously said was false? It won't do to tell the department chief that you won't do it. This is the moment that tests the relation that exists between the writer and his house, and when the sale closes with the closing of the store doors on the last day of the month, you have done for your house a greater good than they often know by refusing, in this instance, to follow out the "absorption" theory and leading them to see that you are altogether right in so doing.

You may teach man or boy to turn a crank, or to trot around himself year after year, but it takes a well-rounded man of affairs to keep the balance between the conflicting interests of departmental chiefs and see that the true store spirit shall pervade all, and be always consistent in its utterance to the public.

The level-headed merchants will before long discover the fact that English, by jerks, is oftentimes offensive, and that a bright store with bright clerks, not offensive—welcome to all who come; a happy method of store talk to the public will give them time to consider how they can best build up higher, lengthen out or widen their store in order to give ample room for the quick coming of business that they will have no difficulty in seeing "just ahead."

Mr. Gillam wrote a grand article. He said some things that others wanted to say. It was altogether best he should have said them; his words had greater weight because of his position and distinguished ability.

TWO METHODS AND THEIR RESULTS.

By J. F. Place.

Success in advertising often comes as the unexpected. This coy will-o'-the-wisp, success, is not always woed to capture—not even by the syren strains of the trained expert, whether he be a master of the bold and striking sentences so attractive to some advertisers, or a fluent writer of the confidential matter-of-fact and commonplace style, popularly known as the Powers school. Much depends on circumstances and surroundings, the occasion and the field and the article advertised.

I have an instance in mind, however, where the Sam Jones bible-pounding style made a liner-hit and a home run, and this after the persuasive methods of the breakfast table, chatty and commonplace composition had proved a wretched failure. It was this way:

One of those good, faithful valet-sorts of men, with more charity than means and more intelligence than muscle, found himself stranded. After waiting many months patiently for the situation which never came, he became seedy and as a last resort took to advertising. (I have substituted a fictitious name, but otherwise can vouch for the facts.)

His first efforts were a good illustration of the commonplace Wanamaker style of advertisement writing, and ran something like this:

WANTED.—A middle-aged, industrious and intelligent man would like a position. Is pretty good at most anything, but especially competent in some things; to take care of horses, say, or for any light clerical or steward's work. Handy man around house or office. Highest references as to honesty and faithfulness. Address TRUSTWORTHY, World office.

This fell flat; no response from any quarter. Our middle-aged friend began to doubt the efficacy of advertising. He had ironed his old hat, turned his cuffs, chalked his shirt bosom, creased his trousers by the Beau Brummel process of sleeping on them, and held himself in readiness to make many calls. The disappointment was severe. He waited a week for another Sunday edition, when his appeal took this shape:

WANTED.—Situation. Wages no object—but a home. Any light work, by an honest, capable American. Best references. Address or call on J. AMPERSAND, 234 Chrystie street.

To this plain business way of putting it he received three postal cards. The first was from a skin-flint, who wanted a man to take care of a vacant flat and board himself, for the munificent privilege of free lodgings. The second was from a charity organization, which wanted a handy supernumerary to bring up coal, keep the fires going, take the orphans to exercise, wind up the clocks, etc.; no wages. The third was a "skin game"—nice situation, light work and good salary; but a deposit of $100 required—"not for publication but as a guarantee of good faith." The old dodge.

This was rough. Two dollars and eighty cents already spent in the "want column" and no returns. Advertising began to have the appearance of being a dead swindle. The exchequer was low—painfully low. He had traveled a good deal; his shoes were unshapely and his feet were sore. Already he was spotted as a free-lunch fiend.

The genius of a forlorn hope seized upon him as another Saturday came, and the Sunday paper announced his wants thus:

Can a man,
A good, square man
Get anything to do on God's green earth?

Jothan Ampersand, 234 Chrystie St.

This struck a responsive chord at once. Chrystie street is not noted for its fine equipages; vegetable wagons and push-carts are the rule. But this Sunday, coupes and carriages, with dock-tailed horses, attracted the wondering gaze of the denizens of the tenements; and during the afternoon numbers of footmen with buckskin breeches and bear-skin capes were seen wandering up and down the block looking for No. 224, while Mr. Ampersand was kept busy prancing out to the sidewalk to be interviewed. Monday brought a flood of black-bordered square envelopes, addressed in angular, Vassar-like chirography to "Mr. Jothan Ampersand." He had already accepted three situations positively, and four others conditionally. He now raised his demand for wages, and offered his services to all who gave him cheer.

He read the advertisement for the one-hundredth time. "Saints forever, what was there in it?" "It was not the advertisement," thought he, "for there was nothing in that; it was not the paper, for that was the same as before; it must be simply good Providence." Thus he reasoned.

But expert advertisers will see that the advertisement simply reflected clearly the situation; it was, in fact, the plain truth cut short and fired at the public through a stinging interrogation point in such a manner that every reader felt that the question was put direct to himself alone. It came from the genius of desperation which had asserted itself above the man, and, in the language of the breezy West, it was a howling success.

BETTER ADVERTISEMENT WRITERS WANTED.

By a Cranky Compositor.

In a recent issue of PRINTERS' INK, under the caption of "Better Printers Wanted," there appeared a communication calculated to convey the impression that a dearth of good printers exists in New York; whereas, on the contrary, just the reverse is the case, as it is a well-known fact among those familiar with the trade in general that there are more first-class printers to the square inch to be found in New York than in any other city in the United States or Canada, if not in the world—the skillful workman gravitating toward the center where his ability is best appreciated, from a financial point of view; and as New York occupies the post of honor in this respect, the fallacy of this correspondent's complaint is at once apparent.

Because the gentleman in question could not find a job office with a font of agate (a size of type rarely used in job work), nor a compositor who could set his advertisement "just as in his mind he saw it should be," he rushes into print and virtually denounces the whole craft as incompetent. With the same degree of consistency could fault be found with the clerk because his employer did not keep in stock a certain kind of goods that a chance customer might call for.

His inability to find a printer who could set his advertisement so as to appear "just as in his mind he saw it should be" reminds one of the spinster who showed her displeasure because her picture "looked just like herself and did not flatter her one bit." Here is a subject for the mind-reading compositor.

I cordially join hands with him in "jumping on" the proprietor of the "large" printing establishment he refers to. I will go further and say that the employing printer who is not enterprising enough to keep on hand a few thousand pounds of agate (roman and italic) at a cost of eighty cents a pound, and several fonts of full-face at $1.25 a pound, and be thereby enabled to cater to the demands of "experts" when they make their annual call, deserves to be censured in the most severe terms.

It may not be amiss to mention that within a hundred yards of the statue of Horace Greeley there is an advertising bureau which can furnish enough agate to get out two papers like the Herald, with full-face and italic sufficient to print complete a paper the size of the Sun. This same bureau employs writers and compositors who have managed to write and put in type advertisements to suit some of the most extensive advertisers in the United States. And here, by the way, I may remark that although not teetotalers, they are not "beery" by any means.

Now a few words in regard to some of the so-called "advertisement writers" and "agents." It would seem as if the only necessary qualifications to become a writer and placer of advertisements are a few months' experience as clerk, or having made a hit as canvasser for some church fair or ball journal. After this the agent is full-fledged, overflowing with "ideas," and knows more about type and printing than Theodore L. De Vinne.

Those advertisement writers are so brimfull of ideas as to entirely overlook spelling, grammar and punctuation, leaving this part of the performance to the "beery printer without brains." Sometimes they will give you an advertisement, telling you to do the best you can in space of one inch, and when it is completed you are told that you haven't grasped the "idea."

In their hunt for "ideas," the plan adopted by those writers, as a general thing, is to gather around them a number of the best printed papers and magazines. When they have found something to suit their fancy, they start in to write the advertisement. When enough is written for, say, a four-inch advertisement, they send the copy to the printer, with "instructions" to "set in space of two inches, well displayed." But this is not all. To help the compositor out, they most invariably paste on the side of the copy samples of the type to be used, cut from, of course, the pages of a high-grade magazine. Whether the printer has this type or not matters little to the expert. His instructions must be followed. If the compositor happens to have it, nine times out of ten he finds that the "sample" type will make two or three letters over the line. The body of the advertisement may be ordered in long primer or brevier, when it will be a tight shave to get it in in agate. When he has done the best he possibly could with the material at his command, he takes a proof and shows it to the expert. He is immediately met with the remark: "That is not my idea," or "You haven't followed instructions." As a consequence, the work has to be done over again. When he sees the bill, or is told the time it has taken to make changes, he generally kicks, says it couldn't possibly have taken so much time, as the changes didn't amount to much, anyhow, and winds up by vigorously abusing the unfortunate compositor.

A good plan for those experts to adopt would be to get specimens of the type used in the office in which they get their advertisements set, and be guided by them in their selection of type, and, in marking a line for display, always count the letters, to make sure that it will come in in a given space.

As your correspondent had such an unfortunate experience, it is fair to presume that in future he will intrust his business as to advertisement setting to the proper person, and let the "beery" printer severely alone.

APTITUDE in advertising is an accomplishment that yields remarkable returns.—Troy Press.

SOME IDEAS ON MACHINERY
ADVERTISING.

By James T. Brown.

Superior mechanisms and systematic and persevering methods of advertising are the essential elements for the attainment of the greatest success in the machinery business.

I have in my mind one concern which grew from a very small beginning to its present greatness in a few years through the application of these adjuncts. Not one of its customers has ever seen a representative or drummer offering its productions, for they are sold only through the influence of the newspapers and trade journals. This is the age for the "something new," and the master spirit guiding the mechanical department is alert to find out the wants of the possible customer. The merits of new machines also need to be presented through effective and thorough advertising. My argument is, that both the mechanic and the advertising man must display more than ordinary experience and intelligence to bring forth the best results.

In days past it was thought important to dress the machine with colors and stripes to please the eye. Now the machine that does best work is the one that sells the best, and rare is one seen with other than an ordinary coat of steel-colored paint. This change was wrought entirely through the effectiveness of advertising. It was thought that the additional expense of fancy painting could be done away with, the labor and expense saved, and the money invested in advertising. In time the public became convinced that paint was not so desirable a feature, after all; what was wanted was machinery to do its work in a manner to secure the highest efficacy.

All readers of newspapers do not buy wood or iron working machines. Some do; not many. Sellers of most goods have buyers of some kind at all times. Their eyes can be caught by an advertisement worded with special attractiveness; but the man who wants a machine for a certain purpose must have it brought to his notice in the shape of a handsomely engraved cut displaying its valuable points. The better the cut, the quicker the perception of its usefulness is reached. The machine must have value or the advertisement is lost.

There are many machinery buyers who have some slight knowledge of machinery, but who have made their money in other business than the one they expect to engage in. With them, too, comes the value of a superior engraving. They are impressed with the quality of the work and the skill required in its execution; thus the first attack is won.

The next is a description stripped of all unnecessary verbiage, written so plainly that a child of passing understanding can almost realize the machine in actual operation. It must be shown in its best light and position, with the parts numbered or separately shown; this appeals to that sense of desire to study out from the description what lack of comprehension they may have of it. Then comes the correspondence to sell it. That is strictly office work and not in the advertising line. To bring the customer to the office or to have him mail his letter for further information is where the advertising man stops. Of course it is understood a conspicuously displayed advertisement cannot by any means be overlooked. It is just as much required as a printed letter-head.

Reading notices which are adroitly written and compactly worded assist towards securing correspondence. By all means bring the "something new" forward at every opportunity and hit the nail hard, not once, but often, to drive it home. While admitting that all men have not the special aptitude for getting the best returns through the medium of newspaper circulation, there can still be a decided improvement shown by the machinery builders in their advertising.

We all agree that the advertising man is the mainstay of a growing business, and his connection with it becomes so close that he is not to be classed with the ordinary clerk.

WHEN you expect an advertisement to create business, word it for business. An advertisement has no life in itself —it depends for its efficiency upon the vigor with which you endow it.—
"When."

WITHOUT the newspaper great advertisers cannot exist. Without the advertisers, great and small (but mainly the small advertisers), the newspaper of to-day would be impossible.—James H. Beals, Jr.

The idea of "You press the button and we do the rest" seems to have thoroughly imbedded itself in the minds of all Rochester citizens. In front of a prominent store one notices the sign, "You come in and we do the rest," and still another has a large sign-board with this, "We make the cigar, you make the smoke." And both of these attract much attention from every passer-by.

HE HAD GONE INTO REAL ESTATE.From an Exchange.

Senator Rooney, of the Colonnade, was leaning on his desk last evening chatting with a guest whom he had not seen for years.

"By the way," said the guest, "what's become of Lew Stevens? He was a queer chap! Kept a store, edited a paper, ran a livery stable, mismanaged a hotel—what's he doing now?"

"Gone into real estate," said Mr. Rooney.

"Indeed!"

"Yes, died last August."

THE LATEST SCHEME TO AVOID PAYMENT.From the Agent's Guide.

Irate Advertiser—I won't pay that bill; my ad. is not in the position which the contract calls for.

Publisher—It isn't, hey? Position was to be top of column, next to pure reading matter. Isn't it there?

Irate Advertiser—Yes, it's top column, sure enough, but alongside particulars of a divorce case. That isn't pure reading matter by a long shot, and I won't pay you.

HE HAD A BIG IDEA.From Brooklyn Life.

"I have a great scheme whereby we may increase our circulation," said the publisher of the religious journal to the editor.

"How's that?" asked the editor.

"Why," replied the man-who-supplies-the-cash, "we'll rave and tear about the Sunday newspaper, and reprint the most sensational articles each week to show how bad they are."

IT HAD THE DESIRED EFFECT.From Puck.

"You have seen the advertisement of my Universal Panacea, I suppose," said the patent medicine proprietor.

"Yes," replied his victim, ungraciously; "I've seen it until I'm sick of it."

"Good! Now take a couple of bottles of it and you'll be all right."

You Can Have

A Prize Advertisement

Prepared if you desire. Make a statement of what you want through the advertising columns of PRINTERS' INK, and if you make a fair offer you can count on receiving a large number of entries. Out of all these you will be pretty sure to secure a few first-class advertisements—probably better than any that could be gotten up in your own office.

Mr. W. Atlee Burpee, who recently conducted a prize contest in this manner through PRINTERS' INK, received 689 entries for his $50 prize. He now writes:

"We have never made any investment in advertising that has been so satisfactory as the $50 for the page in PRINTERS' INK December 24th.

"For not only as the indirect effects of the advertisement and the material received it cannot fail to pay us, but also we find a very decided disposition on the part of the journals in which our regular seed advertisements appear, to give us particularly good positions—which are largely due to the effect of the PRINTERS' INK announcement."

The point now in mind is this: whoever would spend $1,000 in advertising had better pay $100 for the preparation of a good advertisement than to proceed with a poor or inferior one. That an offer of a premium in one issue of PRINTERS' INK should produce so many well-written advertisements goes to show that a similar offer will produce as many or more. We suggest, therefore, that whoever wants an advertisement written shall avail himself of this paper and make his offer here.

You can set forth your wants fully in a one-half page advertisement at a total cost of Fifty Dollars.

ELECTROTYPE^S

*Newspaper
Advertising.*

For many years we have generally supplied the electrotypes used by our advertising patrons and consequently have been among the very largest consumers in this country of newspaper cuts. We have special arrangements with the principal foundries in the United States and Canada and will hereafter receive orders from all who wish to avail themselves of our services.

A large percentage of the newspaper cuts in use are defective in construction to such an extent that satisfactory results are not obtained from them. To prepare an effective cut and to decide what is and what is not a well made electrotype requires the practiced eye of one thoroughly familiar with their manufacture.

For those who desire to avail themselves of our experience and facilities we will contract to furnish well made electrotypes suitable for any kind of newspaper work. We also prepare advertisements for electrotyping, set them in type and procure illustrations if any are needed. For this service a suitable charge is made. Our prices will be found to be as low as is consistent with good work. Applicants should state size and quantity desired.

JOHN IRVING ROMER, EDITOR.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 25, 1891.

OF this week's issue of PRINTERS' INK, 42,000 copies are printed.

WE have never made any investment in advertising that has been so satisfactory as the $50.00 for the page in PRINTERS' INK December 24th.—W. Atlee Burpee & Co.

THERE is probably no more curious occupation connected in any way with the advertising business than that of furnishing ideas to business men. These "ideasts," as they call themselves, will study up your business and offer you suggestions for improvements or for new and novel features. The popular fad of pictorial advertising is being cultivated somewhat in the same way. Bright men, bubbling over with more or less practical ideas but without the ability to draw, will go to an artist and give him a rough sketch of what they have in mind. The artist then finishes the drawing in good style, and the combination is often better than if it had been entirely the work of one man. Several of the sketches used in PRINTERS' INK have been thus worked up from ideas furnished by Mr. James Hanerty, editor of the National Builder. And in a similar manner, many of the best cartoons and funny drawings which appear in the humorous weeklies did not originate with the artist whose name is signed with a flourish at the bottom, but were first conceived by some modest vendor of ideas, who is content to remain in the background and turn out so many "suggestions" a day at a stipulated rate.

In order to retain advertising patrons, publishers should treat them with the same consideration and attention as a wide awake-merchant does his customers. Avoid catch-penny devices and "bargain counter" methods, which only help trade in one particular department for a short time and in the long run does not pay. It is not so much the cost of an advertisement that an advertiser objects to as it is the doubtful feeling he has that he is "not in it" as regards the lowest figures.

WHERE an advertiser is contemplating buying an entire page in a newspaper, he does not usually pay sufficient attention to the size of the page. For example, a page in the Philadelphia Star is one-half the page size of the Philadelphia Ledger. Yet the impression prevails that in two papers of the same circulation a page would have the same value. It may be argued, on the other hand, that no more conspicuousness is gained by a large page than a small one—that where an entire page is taken, space in inches ceases to have measurable value. In smaller displayed advertisements the page size also has a bearing. But just how the advertiser is to take advantage of it will come under the head of the "bottom facts," which our "Stray Shot" contributor advises the public to dig for.

A CORRESPONDENT suggests that we should give the young men in the advertising business a chance to be heard occasionally. He says: "You have a great many young men as subscribers, young men in advertising and advertisers' offices, and a few young men in the advertising business for themselves, from whose ideas many bright things might be culled. We all read with interest the pithy articles from such men as Artemas Ward, W. W. Hallock, J. E. Powers, etc., but it would give a zest to your paper to hear from the younger members of the fraternity." It is true that there are a good many young men in the advertising business in some capacity or other. PRINTERS' INK is always glad to receive good suggestions, and, if we mistake not, some of the best things have emanated from the "younger members of the fraternity." Youth is characterized by more push, enterprise and ability to keep out of ruts, but at the same time it needs the guiding rein of age and experience.

SUGGESTION FOR AN ADVERTISEMENT.

But you can stretch our $3.00 custom-made pants indefinitely without fear of ripping or tearing them. They are made of good material and are well put together. It requires no "stretch of the imagination" to perceive merit in our goods.

STRAY SHOTS.

By Artemas Ward.

Duplication of circulation. Many advertisers are afraid of it. If their expenditures are necessarily small, they are wise to avoid it. Many firms, however, who spend less than $50,000 a year, advertise both in the leading dailies and in the generally circulated weeklies. On such a sum it would be wise to take either one or the other and avoid duplication. But this argument against duplication can be easily met, for every repetition of advertisement in the daily paper is a duplication of its effect, and it is a question whether an advertisement seen one time in twenty papers has not a better effect than if seen twenty times in one paper. In a social sense, the man who you meet twenty times in one parlor would not be considered as a leader in society, but the man who you meet in every parlor, however infrequently, might be so classed.

* * * * *

One of the great powers in advertising is that it produces the results immediately. Twenty salesmen travelling widely and working industriously cannot accomplish in a year what a good advertising agent could bring about by the insertion of one week's advertising.

Prompt results add to the power of a business in compound multiplication. If you double your business to-day by advertising, and then go on adding 10 per cent to it every month, by ordinary methods, you will always be carrying a double sale and adding 10 per cent to the double amount. We recall the old story of the philosopher, who asked the king to reward him for his services by giving him one grain of wheat multiplied into another grain until he had reached thirty grains. He found that all the granaries in the kingdom would not hold the grain, although the sum seemed so simple. If the philosopher could have started with two as a factor, instead of one, the result would have been different, by exactly half of the total amount, on the last day of the calculation.

* * * * *

In what way can a man keep on doubling his business, year after year, except by advertising? The gold mines of California, the silver mines of Honduras, the diamond mines of the Cape, are all far away; advertising and all its possibilities close at hand.

* * * * *

Some one says that my figures showing the comparison between sign-painting and newspaper-advertising were incomplete; that when I referred to the sign on the wall of a grocery store I made no allowance for the painting, which in itself should be worth $1. One hundred thousand dollars thus spent in putting one sign on each of 50,000 stores, paying $1 for the painting and $1 for the rent, would still leave 150,000 groceries and general business! Where will it end? When stores untouched, and nothing would remain over for the newspapers.

GENIUS VERSUS "FIEND."

By C. H. Augur.

We do not know that Artemus Ward's kangaroo was endowed by nature with higher qualities—higher jumping qualities, let us say—than others of his race, yet he alone of all kangaroos jumped into fame. There probably was not a note in his celebrated squeal to arouse the admiring enthusiasm of his auditors, but that squeal produced a wealth of notes for his genial owner. He was undoubtedly all that his friend and beneficiary ever said he was—"a amosin' little cuss;" but nothing more. Left to himself, he might have jumped and squealed from early infancy to extreme old age and never made a dollar or done a single heart good.

Artemus Ward's kangaroo became famous simply because the man who took him in hand advertised him with wit, originality and keen business sense.

These are the qualities that, in this generation, are being applied with equal success to the art of advertising in mercantile business.

You ask your druggist for a cake of toilet soap; and when he inquires "What kind?" you say, "O, Quince's; give me Quince's." There are plenty of other soaps, and you know whose they are, but you have to stop a moment to think of them, while Quince and soap are synonymous terms, and both occur to you at once.

This is the triumph of advertising. So a baking powder, a kerosene lamp, a pickle becomes, like Artemus Ward's kangaroo, famous above all others of its kind by the deft touch of an advertising genius.

The business is assuming vast proportions. If you miss your train on the elevated railway you need not swear, for the air is blue already with advertisements of baking powder. If your children cry nowadays you waste no time in wondering what on earth is the matter, because you recollect the advertisement on the side of the house which tells you what children cry for, and you send right out and get some of it, and of course it has the desired effect.

But this sign-painting advertising leaves 150,000 groceries and general business! Where will it end? When the entire atmosphere has been converted into a dazzling kaleidoscope of shifting colors; when this globular earth goes hurtling through space, one great conglomerate advertisement, the whole system will seem a part of Nature's plan, and the separate advertisements will receive as much attention as the separate hairs on a brindle doggy. Then this lavish, expensive method of advertising won't pay any more.

The real advertising genius is now and will be the man who, like Artemus Ward, quietly and unobtrusively says the right thing in the right place.

The advertising "fiends" are working their own destruction.

AN ADVANCE AGENT'S SCHEME.

"Talking about schemes for advertising," said M. A. Manning, advance agent for the new Irish drama "Rent," yesterday, "I ran against a scheme when I was down in Iowa a couple of months ago that discounted any I ever tried before in the results that followed. I was in Sioux City, and most companies had been playing to hard luck there for months. I ran against a man who had 400 head of cattle to drive to Le Mars, about 30 miles away, and I wanted to get all the patronage possible from the half dozen small towns on the road between there and Sioux City. When I heard that this man was going to drive those cattle through all the towns I wanted to reach I went to him and made an offer of $25 for the privilege of painting the name and date of my show on every steer in the bunch. I had some trouble, but succeeded finally, and hired some men to do the lettering. In a few hours every steer in the lot bore in black letters on his expansive sides the inscription, 'Rent, at the Peavey Grand, Sioux City, Nov. 1st to 6th.' Well, you would have been surprised at the result. On the opening night they came in on the evening trains from all along the route, and we turned people away by the score. Business was good all the week, and I never invested $25 in a more paying scheme in my life."—St. Paul Globe.

PRIZE OFFERS.

The publishers of PRINTERS' INK recently offered two prizes of $50 and $25 respectively for the best two advertisements which might be submitted. As a result over 200 advertisements were sent in from 129 different sources. Among the competitors were many men who would not have done a similar amount of work for a certainty of either of the sums had not there been something of glory to add to the stake. As it was, the prizes were awarded to writers who lived in country towns and who were practically unknown. A great many very good advertisements were handed in, and the success of the affair has produced quite a boom in prize offers. It remains to be seen whether or not the amateurs will continue to contribute.

At any rate, if one can secure a couple of hundred different styles of work by the outlay of $50 to $100, it is a grand speculation for the enterprising man who offers the prize.—A. L. Teele, in the Birmingham Age-Herald.

QUALITY OF CIRCULATION.

Advertisers should consider the kind or quality, as well as the size of the circulation of the paper they propose to use. Nobody ever saw an advertisement of "Ben Hur" in the Police Gazette. A merchant who wishes to reach the family circle is throwing good money away to advertise in a "street publication"—a sheet that is bought for its cheap sensations, which is read in a hurry and the paper then thrown aside. It goes without saying that a journal which enters the homes, which is read by every member of the family, is infinitely more valuable as an advertising medium than one of double or triple its circulation, when the vast bulk of this circulation is in the saloons, the restaurants and the offices—to be scanned, not read, and then thrown into the waste-basket. Thus it is, as will be perfectly apparent, that a journal circulating 30,000 may not be half as good a medium for the advertiser as one with half that circulation.—Cleveland World.

TOP-COLUMN, next to reading matter, on first page, with ample display, avails little or nothing unless the advertisement is properly worded and set with taste.—N. T. Blackwell.

I PITY the man who can travel from Dan to Beersheba and cry " 'Tis all barren!"—Sterne.

ALLEN'S MILLION!

The periodicals of ALLEN'S LISTS reach nearly or quite one-fifth of the rural population of the United States regularly, and over one-fifth in the course of every year. Tens of thousands take no other paper at all. Hundreds of thousands take only their local paper in addition. The shrewdest leading advertisers are uniformly found in ALLEN'S LISTS.

THE TEST.

Those whose business is of such a nature that they can trace their returns to the medium that influences them, find that ALLEN'S LISTS lead all the rest. A number of proprietary medicine houses, such as Wells, Richardson & Co., and Scott's Emulsion, took special means of making such tests. The result has uniformly been large, continuous contracts. We court the test: it is a race we like to enter, especially in company with the fastest of the gilt edged.

Should less than one million copies be printed and circulated, of any month's issues, I agree to give to each advertiser a discount in exact proportion. THIS HAS BEEN A STANDING OFFER FOR YEARS. IT IS UNPARALLELED, NO OTHER PUBLISHER HAVING MADE A SIMILAR OFFER.

Forms close the 18th of each month, prior to the date of the periodicals.

OVER 300,000 READERS OF PRINTERS' INK.

The manager in charge of the revision of the

AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY

— FOR 1891 —

reports that letters received this year indicate an increased interest and a much better feeling on the part of newspaper publishers toward the Directory than has been common heretofore. It is to be remarked that an unusual proportion of the letters from newspaper publishers end with warm expressions of confidence, esteem and good will, and that the same seem to be further intensified by

The Orders for

to be inserted in the Directory. These exceed those of any other year since its publication was inaugurated.

This pleasing condition of affairs is to be attributed in a great measure to the fact that in recent articles in PRINTERS' INK there have been exhibited details illustrating the painstaking manner in which the Directory is compiled, and exhibiting to publishers of newspapers in what a really conscientious manner the work of revision upon the Directory is performed. It would appear that as a little peacemaker PRINTERS' INK is doing a great work in smoothing down the rough places to be found in the path that runs between the newspaper and the Directory.

For the purpose of bringing PRINTERS' INK to the attention of all classes of business men, arrangements have been made to send sample copies at the rate of 20,000 a week until the following lists have been addressed.

In every sample copy sent there will be folded a subscription blank.

For the next three months the circulation of PRINTERS' INK is certain to be more than 40,000 copies, and likely to be less than 50,000 copies, each issue.

The entire circulation is among advertisers, or people who ought to be advertisers.

YOU CAN SELL ANYTHING of use for enjoyment, health, comfort, adornment, consumption or luxury, that appeals to worthy people, of large means or small, through our papers. They have have to sell. Very likely they will pay.

And you may think it is the same with us; but nevertheless we consider it a loss of time to discuss the amount of money spent last year for advertising, but a question of importance to every advertiser is, How can I this year get equal returns for less money?

SOME ONE IS GOING TO Save 99 Per Cent.

Of their outlay without decreasing their returns by using the Sidewalk Printing Machines.

In comparison with some of your advertising investments of last year, would not cards, 3 feet by 6 feet, printed on the sidewalk, where they are bound to be seen, be good value at 10 cents each? They will cost you

Less than one-tenth of a cent each.

We are offering for sale territorial rights for this machine in the United States, England, Canada, etc., on a basis of 2 cents per hundred of population. No territory sold for less than $100. A suitable reduction will be made to any one taking any considerable part or the whole of the territory offered. Make application at once, for on these terms it will not be in the market long.

Is of great value when placed in a medium like the

DENVER REPUBLICAN.

The REPUBLICAN is concededly the most important newspaper in Colorado. No "gift enterprise" business, but a sturdy, honest, unquestioned supremacy, sweeping the State from center to circumference. It costs money to print it—nearly $300,000.00 a year—but it "gets there" to the tune of a half million a month, and has the character and quality, coupled with the requisite numerical strength, as shown by the following letter to Geo. P. Rowell & Co.:

THE DENVER REPUBLICAN, (REPUBLICAN PUBLISHING CO., Publishers.) }
K. G. COOPER, Pres't and Gen'l Man. DENVER, Col., Feb. 1, 1891. }
Messrs. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 10 Spruce St., New York City, New York:
GENTLEMEN—Following is a detailed statement of the circulation of the daily DENVER REPUBLICAN for the Month of January, 1891:

1.....	29,650	12.....	14,200	22.....	14,700
2.....	14,100	13.....	14,250	23.....	14,750
3.....	14,250	14.....	14,350	24.....	15,000
4.....	22,600	15.....	15,800	25.....	23,700
5.....	14,000	16.....	14,550	26.....	14,550
6.....	14,050	17.....	14,800	27.....	14,700
7.....	14,100	18.....	23,650	28.....	14,700
8.....	14,100	19.....	14,600	29.....	14,800
9.....	14,125	20.....	14,750	30.....	14,800
10.....	14,300	21.....	14,800	31.....	14,900
11.....	22,000

Daily average, 16,110

Total, 499,525

The above figures show THE REPUBLICAN'S circulation to be at least $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. greater than that of any other daily published between the Missouri River and the Pacific Coast. In placing advertising for your customers in the West, we hope you will not overlook the superior advantages offered by the quantity and quality of the circulation of THE REPUBLICAN.

Yours truly,

REPUBLICAN PUB. CO.,

Any contract for advertising space in the SATURDAY BLADE or CHICAGO LEDGER now in existence or that may hereafter be made can be discontinued (not suspended) by the advertiser at any time at pro-rata rate for time it has run. If an advertiser can not make money out of space in my papers I don't want his business. W. D. BOYCE.

2

The question is frequently asked, How can the CHICAGO LEDGER jump from about 25,000 copies per week to nearly 100,000 copies per week in a few months after the same is bought by the publishers of the SATURDAY BLADE? The answer is simple and easy to understand. The BLADE is sold in over 7,000 towns each week by special agents and boys for the BLADE. The LEDGER was immediately placed in the hands of the same agents. They sell the BLADE on Saturday and the LEDGER on Wednesday.

I contract to prove 300,000 copies weekly on the BLADE and LEDGER for the next year, and until April 1st make a net rate of $1.00 per line per insertion for both papers. This is only

1-3 Cent per Line per Proved 1,000.

After April 1st rate will be advanced 40 per cent.

Apply for space at once to any agency or to the publisher direct. W. D. BOYCE, Miscellanies.

It is easy running a paper in Wyoming—the mobs furnish noose items.—Texas Siftings.

Not Remunerative.—“It’s all very well to talk of writing for posterity,” sighed the poet; “but posterity isn’t editing any magazines.”—Puck.

“To the victor belong the spoils,” is the doctrine of many politicians, and yet they all object when the spoils come as eggs.—St. Joseph News.

In Florida.—First Guest: Why do you speak of that gentleman as his highness?

Second Guest—He is the proprietor of this hotel. When you come to pay your bill you’ll understand it more fully.—Brooklyn Life.

“Johnny,” said the Sunday school teacher, “do you know where the little boys go who fish on Sunday?”
“Why, of course I knows where they go. Want to go with me?”—St. Joseph News.

New Boston Reporter (assigned to interview the Collector of Customs)—Where will I find Mr. Beard?

Old Boston Reporter—There’s a sign down on State street that says “Whiskers Dyed Here,” so I guess he’s dead.—Town Topics.

“What is it?”

“An actress advertises for a walking gentleman. You’ve had a pile of experience.”—Ex.

Not Visible to the Naked Eye.—Clevertown: I hope you won’t think an old friend impertinent, but about how much is your income?

Dashaway—Well, to tell the truth, old man, I live so far beyond it that it’s way out of sight.—Life.

Landlady—Let’s see, Mr. Impécune owes me for three weeks’ board. You needn’t mind dusting Mr. Impécune’s room this morning, Jane.

Jane—No mum, the gentleman’s done it himself.

Landlady—Done what?

Jane—Dusted.—American Grocer.

A Literary Opinion.—Maggie Zene: Have you read any of these “Talleyrand Memoirs” in the Century?

Addie Page—Yes; but I believe they’re made up. No man living can remember as far back as he claims to be able to. Why, he writes about Benedict Arnold, and says he knew Alexander Hamilton.—Puck.

The Arlington Banner has suspended and Editor Chafin has turned his attention to farming. What a pity it is he didn’t run the farm in connection with the newspaper! A good farm, stocked with a year’s provisions, ought to keep an ordinary newspaper going for twelve months.—Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

Unfortunate.—“You’ve broken that lecture item off nicely,” said the editor to the foreman.

“How so?”

“You’ve cut off all the names of those present but two, and made me say: ‘Scattered through the hall were J. Bronson Smithers and Mrs. Smithers.’”—Puck.

Putting the write man in the write place is the duty of the city editor of a newspaper.—St. Joseph News.

He Was Right.—“Eve,” said Adam, a few minutes after he had eaten the core.

“Yes, Addie?”
“I believe we are going to have trouble in our midst.”—Brooklyn Life.

Little Edith—Mamma, what’s a poorhouse?

Mamma—A poorhouse, Edith, is an imaginary place of papa’s, where he intends residing next week.—Puck.

The New York Continent expatiates most graphically on the noses of many fair women. A good many people think with sadness of the noses of many fair women.—St. Joseph News.

An eminent surgeon says that with four cuts and a few stitches he can alter a man’s face so his own mother would not know him. That’s nothing. Any newspaper can do that much with only one cut.—Ex.

At a recent progressive euchre party given by a woman in New York society, the prizes awarded were handsome pieces of Royal Worcester, silver-handled canes and umbrellas, and for the booby prize a copy of Ward McAllister’s book.—Life.

A Trade Secret.—Mansfield: What is the difference between the dramatic critic and the dramatic editor?

Winter—The critic carves the play on the opening night, and the editor puffs it during the remainder of the engagement.—Puck.

Bluhooley (at Y. M. C. A. Library)—I’ve got a ticket, see? And I wants a book. Hey ye got de life of Jack de Ripper?

Librarian (aghast)—No, sir.
Bluhooley—Well, den, gimme “Fox’s Book o’ Martyrs!” See?—Town Topics.

If You See It in the — It’s So.—“Why are you so sure Hill is the coming man for President?”

“I saw it in a paper my uncle sent me.”
“Where does your uncle live?”

“Rattlesnake Gulch, Lynch County, Texas.”—Puck.

Journalism in Illinois must be in a bad way since the Legislature of that State is considering the enactment of a law making it a felony to perpetrate a “fake” on a newspaper. Chicago reporters are quaking in their boots, and it is said that the chattering of Eugene Field’s teeth can be distinctly heard at the lake front.—Philadelphia Press.

An Impressionist.—“Almost all de Feuilleton’s work is so disjointed. His essays are always broken up by lines of stars. What’s the sense of that?”

“They indicate the places where he dipped his pen into the mucilage bottle, and stopped abruptly to make a few remarks. The stars represent the remarks.”—Puck.

Slam Her In.—The story is told of a country editor who had met with an accident. When he recovered consciousness his rival was present and yelled in his ear: “I’m very sorry for you, sir.”

“You are, eh; what for?”
“They say you’ve broken your spinal column.”

“Confound that boy! He’s dropped the form again. Fill it with slugs and slam her in.”—American Grocer.

CIRCULATIONTHE THREE TELEGRAMS

make a great combination for advertisers. These three weekly papers, published respectively at Elmira, Harrisburg and Albany, now have a combined circulation not much below 300,000 copies per issue. They are all published on Sunday, and as advertising mediums they have all the advantages of Sunday as well as weekly papers.

THE ELMIRA

is the oldest of the three and has a sworn circulation of 172,470 copies. It has a plant valued at $300,000 and on all counts it is prepared to defend its claim to the title of "first exclusively Sunday paper of America."

THE HARRISBURG

was started by the owners of the Elmira Telegram in 1882 and was conducted on the same line that had won such a success for the first-mentioned paper. That these efforts were successful is shown by the fact that the paper has attained a weekly circulation of 75,000.

THE ALBANY

is a later offshoot. No expense has been spared to make it the kind of a paper the great majority of people want. Not only this, but it has been systematically pushed so that it can now verify a claim to 51,000 weekly circulation.

The combination offers an incomparable investment to the advertiser.
